The case: The journalists Adnan Hasanpoor and Abdel Wahd Butimar, have allegedly been tortured and are reportedly facing imminent execution. Mr. Hasanpoor, editor of the weekly Newspaper "Asso", was reportedly captured on 25-1-2007, the Iranian authorities searched his home, confiscated his computer and several books. At that time the charges of which he was convicted were not known. He has reportedly spent several months in detention facilities where torture is practiced systematically. Mr. Butimar, member of Mareewan Green Council for protecting environment, has been detained for several months as well. On July 17, 2007 Mr. Hasanpoor and Mr. Butimar were sentenced to death by the Revolutionary Court in Sanandaj. According to the court their writings were aimed to topple the Islamic Republic of Iran.

DI Views: The human rights situation in Iran has gotten worse in 2007. Torture and ill-treatment in detention is used to punish non-violent protesters and peaceful activists. Essentially press freedom and freedom of expression and opinion has been repressed systematically. The government launches prolonged campaigns to silence critics: arbitrarily shutting down newspapers and magazines, imprisoning journalists, editors and intellectuals, and regularly calling editors and publishers before what can be called "the Press Court". The highest punishment for a journalist is accusing him of publishing articles "aimed to overthrow the Islamic Republic of Iran". In 2003 the head of Tehran's Revolutionary Court Mr. Ali Mobasheri promised "Tehran's Revolutionary Court will spare no efforts in foiling any attempt to overthrow the Islamic government and will seriously deal with the offenders." The authorities block access to popular Internet websites that provide independent national and international news and analysis, and detain writers using this opportunity to disseminate information and analysis to public. Many journalists, writers and intellectuals have been forced to leave the country. The Islamic Republic of Iran still is the largest prison in the Middle East for professional journalists.
